

WHAT IS IT?

The content of this article is based on a webinar presented by Reading Horizons that was followed up with an article by David Clark. The article shares 14 different activities that support the increase of student engagement. The activities are centered around a reading focus, however, many of them can be used in other content areas.

IMPACT?

Research has shown that teachers who spend too much time talking are less likely to have students that are engaged during classroom instruction. Our classroom instruction can be much more than lecture, remote practice, memorization, or drills. When we encourage and provide opportunities for students to engage and participate in group learning, they are more likely to develop an interest in the subject, which also leads to an improvement in learning outcomes.
